GREETINGS FROM PASTOR INGRID!

A few days after the 2020 fires began, a man approached me carrying a lantern. He introduced himself as Brian Dragonfly from MIGIZI, a Native youth empowerment organization located across the alley from the church. MIGIZI's building survived the first night of unrest in the neighborhood, but the next night a fire spread from a neighboring structure. The building and most of its contents were destroyed.

When Dragonfly arrived to assess the situation, the building was still burning. "I decided to capture the fire," he told me, holding up his lantern. Would Holy Trinity Lutheran Church tend the fire for MIGIZI until they could rebuild? He thought that the flame might bring some comfort to his community in the weeks and years ahead.

In our sanctuary, he set the lantern on the altar. I ran to find a candle. We shared the fire and along with it the trauma of the preceding days, the conviction that not all that was destroyed was to be mourned, and the hope that the ashy moment in our neighborhood's life would be an opportunity for new life. Later, I decided to bring the flame home for the night; I was more than a little fire-conscious in those days. I drove the candle home in my car's cup holder. When I made it to my house with the flame still flickering, I wept, recognizing that even shattered dreams need tending.

For the past 2+ years, that fire has been burning in members' homes. Each week, two member homes host the fire. Over time the fire-keepers have figured out best practices, consulting with Roman Catholics about long-burning candles, testing out different lanterns for transport when the flame is passed from home to home, learning from precarious, windy situations along the way. The group of congregants, which has grown as more people take on the honor of tending, is committed to keeping the flame until MIGIZI reopens in its new location—maybe this spring or summer. At that time, Kelly Drummer, MIGIZI's Executive Director, will have Native elders decide how and when the flame is extinguished.

I retell that story because it feels as though most of the past several years has been spent saying “yes” and then figuring out exactly what that means and how we’re going to make it work as a community of faith. I admit it’s not a natural posture for me. Perhaps some of you can relate to that, too. Saying “yes” when the community calls, is part of what author Sharon Welch calls the “feminist ethic of risk.” Welch says that those who engage in the work of mercy and justice always do so from a position of incomplete understanding and limited perspective. It is impossible to control or guarantee the outcome or success of a particular action. Welch invites us into an ethic of risk that is characterized by three elements: a redefinition of responsible action [what seemed reckless might now be the faithful thing], grounding in community [a community that is much, much larger than we often envision], and strategic risk-taking [beginning before we know how it will end].

The biblical story is filled with these three elements: redefinitions, community, and risk taking. We see prophets calling communities into new understandings. We see people of all ages building relationships and learning to live together. We see disciples taking risks at every turn for the sake of the vision made known in the living, dying, and rising of Jesus. All along, God is with them, tending the flame of faith. While we aren’t offered a “how-to manual,” we can look to these stories of the faith to guide our lives. The theme for congregational life this season is “Fire.” Thanks to a sabbatical grant that Holy Trinity received, each household will receive a candle and a copy of a book by Pastor Melissa Florer-Bixler entitled Fire By Night. The book invites us to marvel at a God who travels with people through cloud and fire, by day and by night, since the beginning of time. Florer-Bixler calls the Old Testament a book of fire—reading it draws us close to God’s love which continues to burn away our expectations and set us ablaze.

I look forward to learning together, eating together, worshipping together, serving together, and tending the fire together this winter and spring. Check your mailboxes for the seasonal calendar, which will be sent via postal mail to every member household. It’s a good and full time to be at Holy Trinity. Thanks for being a part of this community!

I leave you with a prayer from Fire By Night.

*Perhaps you do not know how much you need God
to come as a woman in labor,
a birthing spirit hovering over creation, holding within her the memory of you nursing at her breast.*

*Or to surprise you in ordinary places, searching in the fields for sheep,
uprooting his garden,
keeping her bees,
a bird roosting in a tree.*

*If you look closely as you walk,
if you pay attention
with your eye on the book and the world, the blessing will be as near as dirt, as close as air—
a sprouting tree,
a rushing fountain.*

*And if you rage or fear, if your tears are your bread God is there in the middle of it—a steaming pot,
a raging she-bear,
a smoking kiln
or perhaps fire.*

Always fire.

Peace and love,

~ Pastor Ingrid Rasmussen
